Rocky SAR, A Brief History

Rocky Mountain House Search and Rescue was formed in 1991.

The need for such an organization in the community was realized after a young boy named Brett Luoma went missing when he wandered away from the group camp at Prairie Creek on the July 1st weekend in 1990. Volunteers included hundreds of members from the community and the British military in conjunction with the RCMP. The boy was found but had tragically drowned. At only 23 months of age this death touched many people in the community and inspired them to form Rocky Mountain House Volunteer

Search and Rescue.

Rocky SAR was the first ground search and rescue team formed in Alberta, and was also one of the founding members of the Search and Rescue Alberta organization. The team is also home to the only civilian Mountain Rescue Association accredited technical Mountain Rescue Team in Canada. The team is required to recertify with the MRA every five years. They meet and practice once a month.

Though the timeless efforts of countless volunteers and outstanding community support Rocky SAR is now in its 19th year of operation.
